Senator Rodney Tom

48th Legislative District

Dear Neighbors,

Greetings from Olympia. It is an honor to serve as your state senator, and I am continually impressed with the informed and involved citizens of the 48th Legislative District.

I hope you find this government guide helpful, and use it to contact your elected officials, government agencies and services. Open government is critically important for our democracy, and the process works better when you get involved. Without input from constituents, the Legislature cannot pass laws that improve schools, transportation and health care in our district and state.

With today's technology, there are many ways to stay connected with your state and local government. For most of the agencies and elected officials listed in this guide, you will find Web sites and email addresses, to make communication easier and less expensive. I encourage you to use this guide to inform your state legislators of your priorities, and I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Rodney Tom

Go inside the Legislature, online

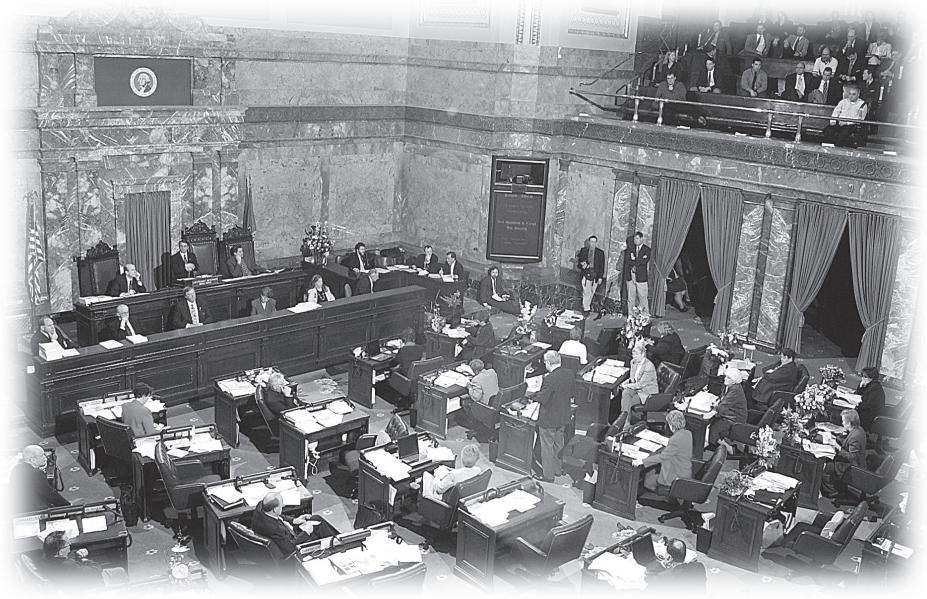

Want to look up a bill? A law? Our state constitution? You can do all this, and find a wealth of other useful information at the Legislature's internet home page, shown here (www1.leg.wa.gov/legislature).

Type the Internet address (officially known as the URL: it's the line beginning with "http") in the address line of your computer's Internet browser, and press "enter." Use your mouse or key commands to move around the web page.

Look for "links" (they're underlined, or in a different color, or both) and click on the ones you want to explore.

Here's a great link to start with: "Participating in the Process" will tell you all about how laws are made in Washington.

Follow the directions, if given. It's that simple!

Education 2007

Early learning

Children who participate in early learning are more likely to stay in school and pursue higher education, and giving children in poverty the opportunity to start early pays huge dividends. Most children who start school behind will never catch up, and the time to prevent dropouts isn't in high school when it's too late – it's early in life, so students have a positive school experience right from the start.

Excellence from kindergarten to high school

K-12 students need an education system that meets their individual learning needs, and helps them plan for success in college or the career of their choice. We must inspire students to pursue careers that grow Washington's economy, by creating hands-on learning opportunities in math, science and technology. We don't know what tomorrow's economy will look like, but we do know lifetime learning will be important for everyone's success.

We also must ensure the Washington Assessment of Student Learning (WASL) aligns with academic standards, and accurately measures each student's mastery of basic skills. The WASL is not about passing a single test – it's about making sure students can meet standards that give them a fighting chance to succeed in our global marketplace.

Access to higher education

Many Bellevue School District students are succeeding in college preparation courses, proving students can step up to rigorous coursework when we set the stage for a systematic, logical progression of learning from the first day of school. I'm committed to making sure our institutions of higher learning have enough enrollment slots and scholarships for these students, because no one should be denied a college education because of financial constraints. In a high tech world, every individual should have access to at least two years of post-high school learning, whether at a community college, university or apprenticeship program.

Health Care 2007

Our present health care system really isn't about health care – it is actually best described as a “sick care” system. We need to focus on prevention, and take steps to prevent illness. The emergency room should never be our first response, because it's way too expensive and does not address the underlying cause of illness.

Senate Democrats and the governor have pledged to provide health care access for all Washington children by 2010, and we're making significant progress each year. Not only is this the right thing to do, it saves money in the long run and creates a healthier work force.

Information technology is another promising way to cut health care costs. Hospitals and clinics can use electronic record-keeping and communications to reduce paperwork and serious diagnostic errors. Many clinics allow patients to correspond with physicians via e-mail, to save money and reduce wait times for those patients whose conditions require an office visit. While modern medicine is developing life-saving medicines and procedures, we must all do our part by exercising and eating healthier if we want to live longer, and with vigor and vitality

Sen. Tom sponsored a prostate cancer screening day at the Legislature to raise awareness about the importance of early detection.

Transportation 2007

It's time we transcend the roads versus transit debate, and acknowledge that both modes of transportation are vital to Washington's economy and way of life. Our unique geography makes cars necessary, but with more than 600,000 vehicles using Interstate 405 each day, we need convenient and cost effective public transit to reduce congestion.

Each year, more people move out of urban centers in search of affordable housing in the suburbs, causing congestion. More than one-third of the Snohomish County work force commutes to King County, and approximately 1 million more people will call Washington home in the next decade.

It's clear we need a regional solution that plans for tomorrow's growth today, and provides options for both vehicles and public transit. A new state Route 520 Bridge should include more vehicle lanes and increased capacity for rapid transit. Extending light rail across Lake Washington would help reduce congestion by offering commuters a convenient, stress-free alternative to driving to work each day.

Environment 2007

Future generations should enjoy the natural beauty we have been so richly blessed with here in the Northwest. Government can help by mitigating negative environmental effects, and fostering private-sector initiatives to protect the environment and develop clean technology. Energy independence through environmentally-friendly alternatives is a win-win proposition: it improves the environment, creates jobs, keeps our dollars at work in Washington, and is a sound foreign policy that reduces our dependence on the unstable Middle East region.

One preventable cause of local environmental degradation is poorly planned growth. Water run-off from housing and commercial developments can pollute areas downstream, but long-term planning can help us better locate new developments, and take steps to reduce environmental impact. We can also limit our contribution to global warming by following the lead of other states and limiting carbon emissions.

Washington's high tech industry and natural resources can help us become a hub for renewable fuel and clean energy. By offering targeted tax breaks for research and development, we can help produce environmentally friendly technology, create high-paying jobs for Washingtonians, and put our state on the map as a clean energy exporter.

An Opportunity for Youth to Get Involved

Work as a Page

Young people can jump right into the thick of legislative activities by working as a page. A page helps legislators and staff transport documents, responds to requests on the Senate floor, and presents the flag during Senate floor sessions. Students page for one week, from Monday through Sunday (Saturday and Sunday only if the Senate is in session) with a two-hour orientation session the Sunday afternoon before the assigned week. Each workday begins at 7:45 a.m. and usually ends at 5 p.m. Housing is not provided, but the Senate can offer assistance in finding a host home.

To serve as a page a student must:

- Have a Senate sponsor;
- Receive parent and school permission to participate;
- Have a Social Security number; and
- Be at least 14 years old but no older than 16.

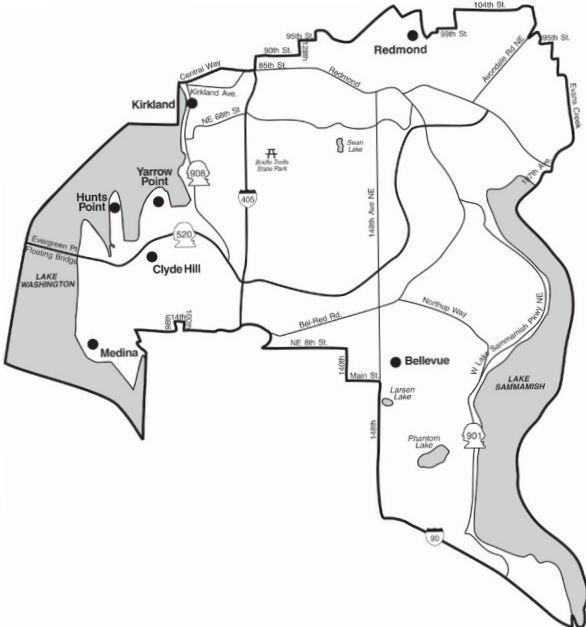

For more information on our page program

visit our web site: www.leg.wa.gov/Senate/Administration/PageProgram

Student pages gather outside the Capitol Building in Olympia.
